ROBERT AMORY TO BECOME CIA DEPUTY CHIEF

Succeeds Becker In Agency Post

Robert Amory jr., local attorney, has been named deputy director for intelligence of the central intelligence agency, to succeed Loftis E. Becker on Friday. Becker has resigned to resume his law practice as Washington partner of the New York City firm of Cahill, Gordon, Zachary & Reindel. It was announced Thursday by Allen W. Dulles, director of CIA.

Since March 1952, Amory has been principal assistant to Becker, and last March was appointed by the President to the planning board of the national security council.
